

Finding my joy in them

Up until now, do you not think that our theme of the year has been presented in a way which is a bit personal? In fact, it was about speaking of the joy of God which He found in His Son or in each of us. It was also about the joy that we could find in God or in the events illuminated by His light.

But we could also find joy in several people. This is why this editorial is entitled: Finding my joy in them. “Them”... but who are they? They are all those who we will meet during this month of June.

Throughout this month, we will possibly have the occasion to gather with family for events related to our faith. This may be for baptisms, Confirmations or First Communions. The solemnities of Pentecost or of Corpus Christi are not far off.

These feasts are moments of gathering which allow us to keep God in the center of our daily life. If we are able to forget our family disagreements... and our cellphones, we will have such joy in spending time with our families and friends, in sharing together this closeness which is priceless.

Thus, yes, in them I find my joy.

In these young parents who finally decide to baptize their children and thus, as a result, grow as a couple.

In seeing cousins who were not speaking and who make the effort to get along for their parents and grandparents.

Such a simple joy which in the end asks this question: as for me, for whom will I be joy this month?
